Goodbye,
January!

Hello February

More Information and Resources The Educational Voice Hearing Network aims to improve understanding of what it is like for the people who hear the voices. Everyone's experience with auditory voices is different. They can say hurtful or terrifying things. People may hear voices because of. Get support if you are hearing voices, talk to your family doctor. Collective voice is supportive of children and young who hear voices, see visions, or have other unusual sensory experiences or beliefs. You may feel different about your voices at different times in your life. Usually, they will check for any physical reason, you may be hearing voices before you are diagnosed with a mental health condition or refer you to a psychiatrist. Taking care of yourself though it can be difficult, it is important to take care of yourself and be kind to yourself. It is common to think that auditory voices should be a sign of a mental health condition, but in fact, many people who are not lyingly wrong, hear voices. They have a guide for employers who want to support people who hear voices in the workplace. They have information about life with voices and offer workshops and events. However, for some people, voices may be neutral or more positive. Hearing Voices Network provides information and support to people who hear voices who have other unusual sensory experiences. This can stop the voices, make them quiet or make you feel less worried about them. If your voices are the result of a mental health condition, you may need Conversational Therapy such as Cognitive Behavior Therapy (CBT). Hearing voices is actually quite a common experience; about one in ten of us experience it at some point in our lives. This may indicate things like eating healthy diet, finding a good job, having a supportive family, solving social problems, making a difference, or helping others. There are many ways to manage voices, including cognitive behavioral therapy, medication, or self-help techniques. Some people find that talking to a therapist or counselor can help them manage their voices. Others find support groups, such as the Intervoice forum, the Voice Collective forum, and the MindÂ&âs Side by Side community. Changing your relationship with your voices can make you feel different about them. Voices may vary depending on how often you hear them, how they sound, what they say, and whether they are familiar or not. MindÂ has more information on how to live with voices, including personal stories of people who hear voices. Understanding Your Voices: Understanding how your voices relate to your life can help you manage your voices. Hearing voices means hearing a voice when no one else is near, or that other people cannot hear. *Last updated: September 27, 2021 While hearing voices may be a symptom of some mental health problems, not everyone who hears voices has a mental illness. Whatever your experience, you are not alone. Sometimes hearing voices can be annoying or distressing. Taking Control Some people find that confronting voices, choosing when to pay attention to them and when to ignore them, and focusing on the voices that are more positive can help them feel more controlled. CBT can help you learn what triggers your voices and how to handle them. This can help you notice patterns of what makes you feel bad, what makes you feel good, or what triggers your voices. Ways to take care of yourself Sometimes, voices are a problem because of your relationship with them. You could try listening to music or an audiobook, keep up with your hobbies, or do something creative like writing or painting. Staying busy Staying busy can distract you from the voices, help you feel more relaxed and allow him to allow him new people. It can also help you face them if they are critical or negative medications, very probably an antipsychotic medication. Understanding Voices has information about different approaches to listen to voices and ways to handle afflictive voices. Couple support groups can provide a space without prejudice where you can feel listened, accepted and less alone. It is possible that you only need medication for a short time while learning other techniques to control the voices. Some people have other hallucinations, such as seeing, smelling, savoring or feeling things that do not exist outside of their mind. This could include carrying a diary of their voices. Some groups are in person, such as those listed on the website of the auditory voices. Intervoice is an international network for people who listen to voices. What does voices feel? Conversation therapy can help you with this, as it can be difficult on your own. Why do people hear voices? Retink has more information about the treatment they can offer. Sharing your experiences There may be a stigma around listening to voices that can make it difficult to talk about them, even with friends or family.
